WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

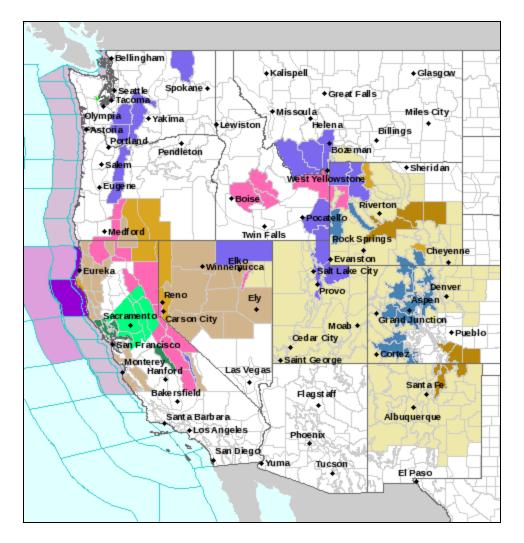

A cool Pacific storm system will spread precipitation across the region today and tonight and provide lingering effects Thursday into Thursday night. Wetting precipitation will impact all areas and especially today and tonight. Snow accumulation levels will generally be above 6000 feet. Snowfall will be measured in feet across some locations in the Northern Sierra. Gustier southerly winds will be found ahead of the system today with peak speeds across the high country generally ranging between 35-45 mph and locally higher. Lesser speeds across the lower elevations. Drier Friday and Saturday as temperatures warm to near normal readings. Expect lighter wind flow overall Friday and Saturday. Increasing southerly winds ahead of the next system on Sunday. The Sunday-Monday system appears to be drier at this time although wetting precipitation is likely for the northern third of the region. A stronger warm up possible early to mid next week due to ridging.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A storm from the north will slowly drop southward causing light rain currently falling over the northern part of the Central Sierra to drop south to Tulare County by this afternoon and increase in intensity. Rain will start along the northern parts of the Central Coast tonight and work its way south during the day Thursday. Light showers will be possible across Southern California Thursday night through Friday morning. Through Friday morning, the Central Sierra and the Big Sur Coast will receive between 2 and 4 inches of rainfall. Elsewhere across Central California, there will be less than an inch of rainfall and there will be little or no rainfall across Southern California with this storm. This storm will also bring southwest to west winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph to the wind prone mountain and desert locations as well as windy locations along the Central Coast tonight through Friday morning. Temperatures will be 5 to 10 degrees above average today, with mid 50s to mid 60s across the mountains and 70s to low 80s in the valleys. Temperatures will cool a few degrees both Thursday and Friday and be near to a little below normal Friday. A weak ridge will bring warmer temperatures and low humidity to most of the region Saturday. Northeast to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountains of Ventura and Los Angeles Counties Friday night through Saturday morning. A Pacific trough will work its way south along the West Coast Sunday into early next week bringing a little cooler temperatures to the area. This trough will also bring showers to Central California with light rainfall accumulations.
